Designed for a small urban site on Madison Street, a primary road in downtown Huntsville, Alabama. The Rahmati Law Office is a new 7,932 square foot facility, housing a law firm on the second floor and a future tenant space on the ground floor. The architects were challenged by the building owner to design a facility which would provide historic aesthetic to reinforce a stretch of downtown which had become somewhat architecturally weakened in recent years. The owner conveyed a fondness for stone masonry yet wanted to achieve beauty within a reasonable budget. The architects utilized Arriscraft Masonry Units to create a "rock face" finish as the primary front facade material, and with great detail introduced a slurry faced brick and cast stone on the remainder of the building facades.
